'Why is project management important?' is an interesting question that clients sometimes pose. They'll ask: "Can't we just brief the team doing the work and manage them ourselves? It'll be loads cheaper." They wonder if they really need project management because on paper it looks like an unnecessary tax and overhead as project managers don't really deliver anything and often ...

There is much debate over when, and even if, it's appropriate to "re-baseline" a project. For the purpose of this blog, I'll define re-baselining as actions taken by the Project Manager, with the customer's concurrence, that result in the elimination of previously accumulated earned value cost and/or schedule variances. Some Project Managers use re-baselining as...
